C BASED VIDEO RETRIEVAL SYSTEMS - arXiv

The first step for video-content analysis, content based video browsing and retrieval is the partitioning of a video sequence into shots. A shot is defined as an image sequence that presents continuous action which is captured from a single operation of single camera. Shots are joined together in the editing stage of video production to form the complete sequence. Shots can be effectively

Content Based Video Retrieval

Content-based video retrieval (CBVR) is a prominent research interest. The ability of a computer to automatically recognize objects in videos is so low that the existing technique for extracting semantic features from all kinds of videos is incapable of retrieving videos based on semantic feature. Here a new approach is proposed for video clip retrieval based on Earth Mover's Distance (EMD).
