What to Look for When Choosing a Stainless Steel Grill

What you want to look for is grill parts that come together nicely and are welded or are fastened with stainless steel bolts. It is best if the bolts are 304 (or 316) stainless steel and are not magnetic. Avoid grills assembled with non-stainless steel bolts, which will rust quickly. Generally, pop-rivets are a bad idea, and riveted grills should be avoided.

Stainless Steel or Cast Iron Grills? Most grill bodies are made from cast aluminum, sheet metal, cast iron or stainless steel. Be careful on this last one since not all stainless steel is created equal. For durability and performance, you want both the grill body and the frame to be made from stainless steel. And check to see if stainless steel parts were used during construction. It's not uncommon for some grill manufacturers.
