The ethics of sustainable agricultural intensification

Agricultural intensification can be technically defined as an increase in agricultural production per unit of inputs (which may be labour, land, time, fertilizer, seed, feed or cash). For practical purposes, intensification occurs when there is an increase in the total volume of agricultural production per unit of inputs. History, Ethics, and Intensification in Agriculture ... Every agricultural scientist knows that his/her specialty underwent stupendous changes between 1900 and 2000. What a century it was for the development of knowledge and a prodigious increase in the output of food and fiber for the world's growing population.

The ethics of sustainable agricultural intensification
This issue of the FAO Ethics Series explores three possible approaches to an ethical analysis of agricultural intensification strategies. Human food needs provide the basis for a utilitarian argument for intensification, while the moral concept of virtue addresses people's duty to work for the good of society. A rights-based analysis then reveals how individuals pursuit of such good can
